The meeting after detailed discussion decided the following :

- (a) The new academic programmes in emerging areas should be designed as integrated and interdisciplinary, that is capable of courses transcending disciplinary silos and leading to convergence.
- (b) The new PG programmes may be developed as blended model – a combination of class room and online teaching. – the proportion of which may vary depending upon the nature of the programme, as decided by the Universities.
- (c) PG programmes spread across different Universities facilitating mobility of students from Universities within the state may also be introduced.
- (d) The programmes so designed should have industry orientation to enhance the employability of students enrolled in the programme.
- (e) In the designing of the programme, care should be taken to forge linkage with research institutions and industries in the state.
- (f) Faculty with relevant expertise for these programmes may be appointed on tenure track before they are regularised.
- (g) The faculty for some courses can be taken from the industry as adjunct faculty.
- (h) The University may meet the expenses for such programmes out of the fee collected from the students. The fees should be affordable to the students.
- (i) The additional expenditure necessary for running the programmes may be met by Government by giving additional funds to Universities as and when required in the form of matching grants. A formula may be evolved for giving additional grant/ matching grant such as 75:25 (75% by the Government & 25% by the University) or any other ratio decided by the Government. This project can be called University/ State Sponsored programmes."
